On the History of Christianity in Pre-Islamic Arabia: The Letter of Simeon of Beth-Arsham about persecution of Christians, by Yury Arzhanov

This article by Yury Arzhanov is on the persecution of Christians in South Arabia, mainly in the city of Nagran, at the beginning of the 6th century, initiated by the Jewish Himyarite king Dhu Nuwas. It contains an introduction with a general survey of the history of Christianity and Judaism in pre-Islamic South Arabia and a Russian translation from Syriac of one of the main sources about the persecution of Christians—a letter of the Monophysite bishop Simeon of Beth-Arsham. The translation is supplied with a detailed commentary.

On the History of Christianity and Judaism in Pre-Islamic Arabia, by Yury Arzhanov

The article provides an examination of the sources on the history of Judaism and Christianity in South-Arabia in the pre-Islamic period, which bear witness to contacts between the East-Syriac Christians and the Jews in that region. Pointing at relationships with the Jews served as a popular polemical device in the Christian literature. Nonetheless we have enough evidence showing that contacts between Jews and Christians took place, and the base for them provided an institute of the “Godfearers” in the Jewish synagogues.

Prayer or weeping? Syriac Version of 4 Ezra in the History of Biblical Translations, by Evgeny Barsky

The article deals with the Fourth Book of Ezra, a Jewish apocryphon composed about 100 A.D. Special attention is paid to the textual relations of the book with 5 and 6 Ezra, with which it is joined in the Vulgate, as well as to the specific characteristics of its Syriac version. Accounts of Ezra's fasts in different versions are thoroughly compared: the question “Did Ezra pray or weep when fasting?” seems to be unsolvable with available data but its discussion provides us with precious information about the book's early history.

Languages of the World: The Semitic Languages. Akkadian. Northwest Semitic. Anna Belova, Leonid Kogan, Sergei Loesov, Olga Romanova (eds.)

This book continues the encyclopedic multi-volume series “Languages of the World”, which is being prepared at the Institute of Linguistics, Russian Academy of Sciences. This is the first part of the two-volume set dealing with Semitic languages. It comprises a general survey of the Semitic language family, as well as descriptions of individual Semitic languages: Akkadian (with separate articles on Old Assyrian and Sargonic) and the Northwest Semitic languages (Ugaritic, Phoenician, Ancient and Modern Hebrew, Imperial Aramaic, Jewish Palestinian Aramaic, Classical Syriac, Classical Mandaic, Neo-Aramaic of Maalula, Turoyo, and Modern Mandaic). Also included are general surveys of Aramaic and Canaanite, as well as a summary description of Modern Northeast Aramaic. Each essay follows the typologically oriented template maintained throughout the Languages of the World series. This volume concludes with several appendices: a concise history of Northwest Semitic alphabets (with samples) and a set of maps illustrating the ancient and modern spread of the Semitic languages. This volume is intended to be both a fundamental linguistic study and a reference source. It is addressed to a wide audience of linguists from various fields, historians, cultural anthropologists, teachers and students, and anyone interested in Semitic studies.

Martyrdom of Mār Qūryāqūs and Yōlity (Cyriacus & Julitta) / Russian State University for the Humanities, Institute for Oriental and Classical Studies; Critical text, Russian translation from Syriac, and research by Alisa Terpelyuk

The present critical edition of the Martyrdom of Cyriacus and Julitta is based on the MS of the Vatican Library, Syriac 161 (its facsimile reproduction was issued by the Bibliotheca Apostolica Vaticana together with Brigham Young University) and on the text of the Martyrdom edited by P. Bedjan (Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum III). The latter was collated with the relevant part of the MS of the Institute of Oriental Manuscripts, Saint-Petersburg (Dietrich d). The edition is accompanied by a thorough philological analysis of the text. The target audience of the edition are scholars specialized in the Syriac literature (in particular, Syriac hagiography and apocrypha) as well as those interested in studying Syriac language and textual criticism. The edition is published by the Assyrian Church of the East, Moscow.

The Garden of Ascetic Delights: Hermeneutic Strategies in the Liber Graduum, by Aryeh Kofsky and Serge Ruzer

This study focuses on the peculiar concept of a dual paradise characteristic of the Liber Graduum (LG), where it also determines other aspects of the discussion such as the nature of primordial sin—as a shift in the intellectual focus—and the way of restoring the paradisiacal mode of existence via imitation of Christ's kenosis. The study highlights the way in which the ascetic agenda of LG informs its author's hermeneutical strategies with regard to the biblical narrative on the Garden of Eden. Some particularities of this foundational narrative clearly contradict the LG's ascetic stance and thus engender idiosyncratic exegetical solutions.

Lost and refound texts of Ephrem the Syrian, by Dmitry Morozov

Qawl ‘alā-š-Šaytān wa-l-Mawt (Saying on the Devil and the Death) attributed to Ephrem the Syrian and extant only in Arabic and Georgian versions was incompletely edited and translated into Russian in 1908 by the eminent orientalist I.Yu. Krachkovskiy. Later, he also published another extract from the same Arabic codex. Both the parts were misattributed for a long time. The present paper exhibits the exciting history of studies of these disiecta membra. A Russian version of the missing initial lines as well as some corrigenda is appended.

The Beginning of the Second Wave of Christianization of Axum: Gädlä Cadqan and the Syrian BOΣKOÍ, by Alexei Muraviev.

The Christianization of the Late Antique Axum in Ethiopia is still a widely debated area of research. Much attention has been drawn to the legendary figure of Aedesius-Frumentios. However, no solid ground underlying this story told by Rufinus could be seen up to the present time. The second evangelization is also quite poorly depicted in the sources. The Ethiopic Gädlä Cadqan is a hagiographic text which tells the story of the first group of the Syrian monks who arrived from the Roman Empire. In the article the meager data of the Gädlä Cadqan are compared to what is known about the Syrian monophysite migration to Eastern countries following repressive measures taken by the Byzantine emperor Justin. The author points out the ascetical behaviour of the Righteous (cadqan) which is similar to the βουσοι-asceticism attested in Greek sources. The grazers (βουσοι) practiced the same type of diet and self-mortification as the Ethiopian enlighteners. The role of these first Syrian immigrants is quite important: they established a path to Axum as a way of missionary movement outside the Empire. The Nine Saints were the next group of Syrians that followed in their footsteps later in the 6th century A.D.

East-Syriac hymns (‘onyāṭā) and homilies of Narsai: Six hymns from the liturgical book Warda, by Anton Pritula

The publication presents six strophical hymns (‘onyāṭā) used in the East-Syrian Church for different holiday services. The hymns form with other more than one hundred ‘onyāṭā the so called Warda collection, many MSS of which still survive. Such hymns are mostly ascribed to Giwargis Warda (13th century) whose name bears the the collection itself. The article is focused on the connection of such hymns to the East-Syrian Church poetry tradition. The influence of Mar Narsai’s homilies (5th century) could be traced in many of them. One can even conclude that the ‘onyāṭā genre was aimed to adjusting the Church tradition to the contemporary tastes.

A hymn on inequality in human society from the liturgical book Warda, by Anton Pritula

The hymn of the third Sunday of the šawō’ā of Elias is published along with its Russian translation and preceded by an introduction. Its style is quite like what is supposed to be Giwargis Warda’s style, but the text is absent from the earliest MS of Warda (Cambridge Add. 1983). In Vat. Syr. 567 it is put in the section of the “Friday of the departed”. The publication is based on another Cambridge MS (Add. 1982) in which the hymn explicitly ascribed to Giwargis Warda.

The name of Nestorius as a symbol, and the question of his veneration in the East-Syriac tradition of Christianity, by Nikolai Seleznyov

This article is an historical analysis of different attitudes towards Nestorius of Constantinople which became ‘traditional’ and even formed opposing traditions in Christianity. The main focus of the article is on the entering of veneration of Nestorius into the East-Syrian tradition as well as on the regular attempts of the those condemning Nestorius to erase his name from the symbolic books of the Church of the East.

On the history of a lost culture of Christian East: Palestinian Melkites, by Nikolai Seleznyov

The Melkites of Syro-Palestinian tradition — the Palestinian Arameans who were partisans of Byzantium in the Middle East — are known to the scholars for using Christian Palestinian Aramaic language and their own specific script. The question the author discusses in the article is what were the forming factors of the tradition and why it later disappeared in the Arabic Christianity.

Language of symbols: Typology of Theotokia in the Syriac hymnology translated from Greek, by Natalia Smelova

The main focus of the article is the Old Testament typology of the Virgin in the Syriac hymnographical texts to the Theotokos from the 9th–11th centuries. The texts were translated from Greek into Syriac and belong to both Syriac Chalcedonian and the West Syrian traditions. The author undertakes a comparative study of every single type of the Virgin in the Syriac text with the respective ones in the original Greek theotokia and other Syriac versions and translations. All known Syriac and Greek versions of the Old and New Testament are used including primarily the Peshitta and the Septuaginta. In some cases comparisons are made with the Hebrew Bible, St. Jerome’s Latin translation and Origen’s Hexapla.

An 8th–century Syriac MS with homilies by Severus of Antioch from Saint-Petersburg MSS collections: some codicological observations, by Natalia Smelova

The article deals with the 8th–century Syriac manuscript of Homiliae Cathedralis by Severus of Antioch. Its fragments are divided between two Oriental manuscript collections in St Petersburg: the Russian National Library (24 fols.) and the Institute for Oriental Manuscripts of the Russian Academy of Sciences (53 fols.). Both parts of the manuscript contain sections of the homilies 59, 62, 63, 69, 70, 76, 79, 81 and the full text of the homilies 64–68, and 71–75. A codicological study of the fragments made it possible to provide a reconstruction of the codex of which six complete and six partial quires had survived. Some palaeographical features indicate that St Petersburg fragments are probably earlier than all other known manuscripts containing the Syriac text of the Homiliae Cathedrales.

Jacob bar Shakko’s Book of Treasures: A Theological Compilation from the Period of the Syrian Renaissance, by Mikhail Tolstoluzhenko

Jacob bar Shakko’s Book of Treasures is a little-known Syriac theological treatise written in 1231 AD. This book is sometimes called a theological summa and is likened to its contemporary Latin summae. The article briefly surveys the structure of the Book of Treasures and shows that this comparison with the Western summae is not quite correct.

Could Christ’s Humanity See His Divinity?: An Eighth-Century Controversy between John of Dalyatha and Timothy I, Catholicos of the Church of the East, by Alexander Treiger

This study focuses on the eighth century East-Syriac mystic John of Dalyatha and his views on the vision of God. These views, inspired by Evagrius and the Dionysian corpus, were condemned by a church council in 786 as being at odds with the christological and trinitarian doctrines of the Church of the East. In addition to the doctrinal background, the article analyzes the social causes of John of Dalyatha’s condemnation. It argues that the Catholicos Timothy I’s “anti-messalian” campaign of which John of Dalyatha’s condemnation was a part must be seen against the backdrop of the uneasy relations between the Church of the East and the Islamic state in the early Abbasid period. The article is followed by a Russian translation of the Letter 34 of John of Dalyatha by Nikolai Seleznyov.
