

List of Contributors

► Maria Ackrén has a Ph.D. from Åbo Akademi University in 2009. She is Head of the Department of Social Sciences, Ilisimatusarfik/University of Greenland, and Associate Professor in Political Science since 2011. Her research covers different forms of autonomy, island studies, comparative methodology and international relations regarding the Arctic and especially Greenland. She teaches courses on political science, international politics and methodology of political science. Her recent article is titled “The Globalization of the Arctic: Negotiating Sovereignty and Building Communities in Svalbard, Norway” (together with A. Grydehøj, I. Dynamics and A. Grydehøj), Island Studies Journal, Vol. 7, No. 1, pp. 99–11 (<http://www.islands-tudies.ca/node/366>).

Sandra Maria Rodrigues Balão is Assistant Professor at Universidade de Lisboa. She holds a master's and a Ph.D. degree from the Higher Institute for Social and Political Sciences (School of Social and Political Sciences), University of Lisbon (ISCSP-ULisboa), where she teaches both undergraduate and graduate courses on political science, strategic and international relations studies. She is also an integrated researcher in CAPP (Centre for Administration and Public Policies) where she coordinates the Politics and Government Research Group. She has also completed the Portuguese National Defence Course (CDN2010) from the Portuguese National Defence Institute (National Defence Ministry). Her main areas of research interest are globalization and military strategic studies, the international system and its (new) actors, multilevel power politics, global studies, elite theory, governance, and state studies. She has presented papers in international conferences, such as those organized by ECPR, IPSA and ISA, and is a peer reviewer of scientific journals such as IPSR, Empedocles, Proelium, Nação e Defesa, Geopolítica. She has also published some of her research outputs.

Rasmus Gjedssø Bertelsen is Assistant Professor in international relations at Aalborg University, Denmark, an Affiliate of the Public Diplomacy Collaborative at the Harvard Kennedy School of Government and a member of the University of the Arctic Thematic Network on geopolitics and security. He holds a Ph.D. in IR from Cambridge and has held post-doctoral fellowships at Harvard Kennedy School of Government, Tokyo Institute of Technology, United Nations University–Institute of Advanced Studies and Aalborg University. He has been continuously engaged in Arctic studies and was invited to the Northern Research Forum, Arctic Science Summit Week, Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik, International Polar Year Oslo Science Conference, International Symposium on Arctic Research (Tokyo), Arctic Frontiers, International Polar Year from Knowledge to Action Conference and Calotte Academy. He also serves on the boards of Arctic Portal and the Cambridge Review of International Affairs and has served on the boards of the British International Studies Association, the Churchill Archives Centre and the Churchill College Phoenix Society. Late 2014, he will take up the Barents Chair in Politics at UiT-The Arctic University of Norway.

Michael T. Corgan is Associate Professor of International Relations at Boston University (BU) and has been a member of the BU faculty since 1990. His courses cover Nordic Europe, European security, international law and organization. He publishes on security affairs, is a frequent commentator for Boston and national media on security, NATO, and international affairs, and is a regular interview subject in Icelandic media. He has lectured extensively in Iceland and Europe for the State Department. In 2001 he was Fulbright professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Iceland and was invited back to the University as Visiting Professor in 2006. His writings on Icelandic politics and affairs have been translated into Icelandic and Swedish. His book Iceland and Its Alliances: Security for a Small State was published in 2002. He is Founding Partner of the Centre for Small State Studies at the University of Iceland. A graduate of the US Naval Academy, he was a career naval officer for 25 years specializing in NATO matters before entering his academic career.

Lassi Heininen is Professor of Arctic Politics at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Lapland, Finland. He is also Docent of Northern Geopolitics at University of Oulu, Finland; Adjunct Professor at Trent University, Ontario, Canada; Visiting Professor at University of Akureyri, Iceland; and Director of International Summer School in Karelia at Petrozavodsk State University, Russia. He teaches and lectures regularly abroad and supervises Ph.D. students from Arctic countries. His research fields include IR, geopolitics, security studies, environmental politics, Russian studies and Arctic studies. He is the author of more than 200 scientific publications and is the editor of The Arctic Yearbook. His recent publications include “Northern Geopolitics: Actors, Interests and Processes in the Circumpolar Arctic” in: Polar Geopolitics: Knowledges, Resources and Legal Regimes (2014); “Arctic Security – Global Dimensions and Challenges, and National Policy Responses” in: The Yearbook of Polar Law Volume 5, 2013; Arctic Strategies and Policies – Inventory and Comparative Study (2011); Globalization and the Circumpolar North (co-editor C. Southcott) (2010). He is actively participating in international scientific conferences, seminars and workshops as well as at gatherings implementing the interplay between science and politics. He is also the chairman of Northern Research Forum’s Steering Committee and the leader of the Thematic Network on Geopolitics and Security.

Valery Konyshv is Professor of International Relations at the St. Petersburg State University, Russia. He holds both the Ph.D. (history) (1997) and Habilitation (political science) (2005) from the Nizhny Novgorod State University. His fields of research include international relations theory, international security, US foreign policy thinking and making, US and Russian policies in the Arctic. His recent publications include V. Konyshv & A. Sergunin, Contemporary Military Strategy (2014); V. Konyshv, A. Sergunin et al., Contemporary International Relations Theories (2013); V. Konyshv & A. Sergunin, The Arctic in International Politics: Cooperation or Competition? (2011).

Gustav Pétursson holds an MA in International Relations from the University of Iceland, and is currently working toward a Ph.D. degree in international relations at the University of Lapland. His fields of expertise are: Icelandic security- and defense policy, NATO and security issues in the Arctic. Gustav has been a board member of NEXUS: Research Forum on Security and Defence since 2010 and a member of Thematic Network on Geopolitics and Security since 2011.

Alexander Sergunin has a Ph.D. (history) from Moscow State University (1985) and Habilitation (political science) from St. Petersburg State University (1994). He teaches international relations theory and Russian foreign policy in the St. Petersburg State University and Higher School of Economics. His fields of research include international security theory, cross- and trans-border cooperation in Northern Europe, Russia's security policies and the Arctic region in world politics. His recent books include Contemporary International Relations Theories (2013) (with V. Konyshv et al.); Military Strategy of the Contemporary State (2012) (with V. Konyshv); Laboratories of European Integration: City-Twinning in Northern Europe (2012) (with P. Joenniemi); The Arctic in International Politics (2011) (with V. Konyshv); and The EU-Russia Common Space on External Security (2011).