

practices. Cedric has a PhD in Applied Ethics from the Department of Philosophy at the University of Stellenbosch. Recent publications include "Rising Powers and the Future of Peacekeeping and Peacebuilding" (NOREF 2013), and "Understanding Peacebuilding as Essentially Local" (Stability Journal 2013).

Surupa Gupta is an Associate Professor of Political Science and International Affairs at the University of Mary Washington in Virginia, United States. She specializes in Indian foreign economic policy, India's role in global economic governance and the domestic politics of trade liberalization in India. She has a second research focus on the politics of India's agricultural marketing policy reforms in the age of globalization. Her most recent book-length publication is The Political Economy of Agricultural Policy Reform in India (IFPRI, 2011). She received her PhD in International Relations from the University of Southern California, Los Angeles.

Flemming Splidsboel Hansen is an Associate Professor at the University of Copenhagen. He was previously with the Danish military and at the Central European University in Budapest. His research interests include European Union relations with the post-Soviet space, Russian foreign policy, integration within the Commonwealth of Independent States and norm diffusion. He is currently working on Russian identity politics and on the normative foundation of Russian arms exports.

Thomas Mandrup is an Assistant Professor at the Royal Danish Defense College, and an external lecturer at the Centre for African Studies, University of Copenhagen, Denmark. He has published articles and book chapters, and co-edited several books on issues related to African security governance and South African foreign policy. His latest co-edited book was entitled On Military Culture: Theory, Practice and African Armed Forces (Cape Town University Press, 2013). His latest book chapter is "Denmark: How Not to Outsource Military Services," in Commercialising Security in Europe, ed. Anna Leander (Routledge/PRIO, 2013).

Liselotte Odgaard is an Associate Professor at the Royal Danish Defense College. She has published extensively on Asia-Pacific security, China's rising power and strategic theory. Her most recently published monograph is China and Coexistence: Beijing's National Security Strategy for the 21st Century (Woodrow Wilson Center Press/Johns Hopkins University Press, 2012). Her most recently published article is "Peaceful Coexistence Strategy and China's Diplomatic Power," The Chinese Journal of International Politics 6 (2013): 233–72. Liselotte Odgaard was selected as a contributor to the 2014 Nobel Symposium with the theme "Does the rise and fall of great powers lead to conflict and war?"

Alexander Sergunin is a Professor, with a PhD in history from Moscow State University (1985) and Habilitation in political science from St Petersburg State University (1994), Russia. He teaches International Relations Theory and Russian Foreign Policy at St Petersburg State University and Higher School of Economics. His recent books include Contemporary International Relations Theories (Moscow, 2013, with Valery Konyshv et al.), Military Strategy of the Contemporary State (St Petersburg, 2012, with Valery Konyshv), Laboratories of European Integration: City-Twinning in Northern Europe (Tartu, 2012, with Pertti Joenniemi), The Arctic in International Politics (Moscow, 2011, with Valery Konyshv), and The EU-Russia Common Space on External Security (Nizhny Novgorod, 2011).

Karen Smith holds a PhD from the University of Stellenbosch, and is currently a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Political Studies at the University of Cape Town, where she teaches International Relations. She is an associate editor of the journal International Political Sociology, and previously served as the Secretary-General of the United Nations Association of South Africa. She has recently published on the topics of Africa's marginalization and potential contribution to International Relations theory as well as the role of soft power in India and South Africa's foreign policy. Her current research interests centre on the rise of emerging powers like South Africa and India, specifically their role in advancing the interests of the global South in multilateral groupings.

Zha Daojiong is a Professor of International Political Economy at Peking University, where he specializes in such non-traditional security topics as energy, food, and trans-boundary water use, in the areas of Southeast Asia, the trans-Pacific region, and Africa. His recent research interest has expanded to political/societal risk management for Chinese foreign direct investment in developing as well as developed economies. He is the author and editor of several books including, most recently, Managing Regional Energy Vulnerabilities in East Asia (Routledge, 2013). Prior to his tenure at Peking University, he taught at the University of Macao, the International University of Japan, and Renmin University of China. Dr Zha received a PhD in Political Science from the University of Hawaii.